

THE ALCHEMIST HIS PRACTISE

Wherein is declared the Vertues of Hearbes, Mineralls, and Chymicall Preparations

By a Student in the Spagyrick Art

LONDON

Printed for J. Smith, at the Signe of the Bell

MDCLXII

Entered according to Act of Parliament
All rights reserved by the Stationers Company

CHAPTER IV

Of the Chirurgion his Art

IT hath beene shewed by Paracelsus, that ye physician who knoweth not the starres can never rightly compound his medicaments. For the quintessence of everie thing lyeth hidden, and must bee drawne forth by calcination.

The alembick being set upon a gentle fire, the spirit ascendeth and is gathered in the receiver. This the ancients called aqua vitae, and helde it soveraigne against all putrefaction.

* See the Basilica Chymica of Croll, lib. ii, cap. vii.

Nowe the chirurgion, having his simples ready,
shall marke well the humours of his patient,
and by the doctrine of Paracelsus discern whether the quintessence be wanting.

Take of the mineralls such as are perfected by nature, and let them bee calcined in the alembick until the spirit ascendeth. So shall the chirurgeon have his medicaments ready.

Fig. 1. The alembick and its receiver.

THE ALCHEMIST HIS PRACTISE

Of the vertues of hearbes much hath beene written, yet fewe have shewed how the quintessence is drawne. The soveraigne remedie lyeth in calcination, saith Paracelsus.

Let the practitioner marke that putrefaction
goeth before generation, and that the alembick is the chirurgion his surest instrument in all the operations of this spagyrick art.

PLATE I