

THE CHIRURGEON HIS PRACTISE

A Digitally Typeset Edition

London, 1662

The chirurgeon, having his simples ready, shall marke well the humours of his patient, and by the doctrine of Paracelsus discerne whether the quintessence be wanting. The alembick being set upon a gentle fire, the spirit ascendeth and is gathered in the receiver; this the ancients called aqua vitae, and helde it soveraigne against all putrefaction.

Of the vertues of hearbes much hath beene written, yet fewe have shewed how the quintessence is drawne forth by calcination. Take of the mineralls such as are perfected by nature, and let them bee calcined in the alembick until the spirit ascendeth. So shall the chirurgeon have his medicaments ready against the season of sicknesse, and the quintessence preserved.

The chirurgeon, having his simples ready, shall marke well the humours of his patient, and by the doctrine of Paracelsus discerne whether the quintessence be wanting. The alembick being set upon a gentle fire, the spirit ascendeth and is gathered in the receiver; this the ancients called aqua vitae, and helde it soveraigne against all putrefaction.

Of the vertues of hearbes much hath beene written, yet fewe have shewed how the quintessence is drawne forth by calcination. Take of the mineralls such as are perfected by nature, and let them bee calcined in the alembick until the spirit ascendeth. So shall the chirurgeon have his medicaments ready against the season of sicknesse, and the quintessence preserved.

The chirurgeon, having his simples ready, shall marke well the humours of his patient, and by the doctrine of Paracelsus discerne whether the quintessence be wanting. The alembick being set upon a gentle fire, the spirit ascendeth and is gathered in the receiver; this the ancients called aqua vitae, and helde it soveraigne against all putrefaction.

Of the vertues of hearbes much hath beene written, yet fewe have shewed how the quintessence is drawne forth by calcination. Take of the mineralls such as are perfected by nature, and let them bee calcined in the alembick until the spirit ascendeth. So shall the chirurgeon have his medicaments ready against the season of sicknesse, and the quintessence preserved.

The chirurgeon, having his simples ready, shall marke well the humours of his patient, and by the doctrine of Paracelsus discerne whether the quintessence be wanting. The alembick being set upon a gentle fire, the spirit ascendeth and is gathered in the receiver; this the ancients called aqua vitae, and helde it soveraigne against all putrefaction.

Of the vertues of hearbes much hath beene written, yet fewe have shewed how the quintessence is drawne forth by calcination. Take of the mineralls such as are perfected by nature, and let them bee calcined in the alembick until the spirit ascendeth. So shall the chirurgeon have his medicaments ready against the season of sicknesse, and the quintessence preserved.

The chirurgeon, having his simples ready, shall marke well the humours of his patient, and by the doctrine of Paracelsus discern whether the quintessence be wanting. The alembick being set upon a gentle fire, the spirit ascendeth and is gathered in the receiver; this the ancients called aqua vitae, and helde it soveraigne against all putrefaction.

Of the vertues of hearbes much hath beene written, yet fewe have shewed how the quintessence is drawne forth by calcination. Take of the mineralls such as are perfected by nature, and let them bee calcined in the alembick until the spirit ascendeth. So shall the chirurgeon have his medicaments ready against the season of sicknesse, and the quintessence preserved.

The chirurgeon, having his simples ready, shall marke well the humours of his patient, and by the doctrine of Paracelsus discern whether the quintessence be wanting. The alembick being set upon a gentle fire, the spirit ascendeth and is gathered in the receiver; this the ancients called aqua vitae, and helde it soveraigne against all putrefaction.

Of the vertues of hearbes much hath beene written, yet fewe have shewed how the quintessence is drawne forth by calcination. Take of the mineralls such as are perfected by nature, and let them bee calcined in the alembick until the spirit ascendeth. So shall the chirurgeon have his medicaments ready against the season of sicknesse, and the quintessence preserved.

The chirurgeon, having his simples ready, shall marke well the humours of his patient, and by the doctrine of Paracelsus discerne whether the quintessence be wanting. The alembick being set upon a gentle fire, the spirit ascendeth and is gathered in the receiver; this the ancients called aqua vitae, and helde it soveraigne against all putrefaction.

Of the vertues of hearbes much hath beene written, yet fewe have shewed how the quintessence is drawne forth by calcination. Take of the mineralls such as are perfected by nature, and let them bee calcined in the alembick until the spirit ascendeth. So shall the chirurgeon have his medicaments ready against the season of sicknesse, and the quintessence preserved.

The chirurgeon, having his simples ready, shall marke well the humours of his patient, and by the doctrine of Paracelsus discerne whether the quintessence be wanting. The alembick being set upon a gentle fire, the spirit ascendeth and is gathered in the receiver; this the ancients called aqua vitae, and helde it soveraigne against all putrefaction.

Of the vertues of hearbes much hath beene written, yet fewe have shewed how the quintessence is drawne forth by calcination. Take of the mineralls such as are perfected by nature, and let them bee calcined in the alembick until the spirit ascendeth. So shall the chirurgeon have his medicaments ready against the season of sicknesse, and the quintessence preserved.

The chirurgeon, having his simples ready, shall marke well the humours of his patient, and by the doctrine of Paracelsus discerne whether the quintessence be wanting. The alembick being set upon a gentle fire, the spirit ascendeth and is gathered in the receiver; this the ancients called aqua vitae, and helde it soveraigne against all putrefaction.

Of the vertues of hearbes much hath beene written, yet fewe have shewed how the quintessence is drawne forth by calcination. Take of the mineralls such as are perfected by nature, and let them bee calcined in the alembick until the spirit ascendeth. So shall the chirurgeon have his medicaments ready against the season of sicknesse, and the quintessence preserved.

The chirurgeon, having his simples ready, shall marke well the humours of his patient, and by the doctrine of Paracelsus discerne whether the quintessence be wanting. The alembick being set upon a gentle fire, the spirit ascendeth and is gathered in the receiver; this the ancients called aqua vitae, and helde it soveraigne against all putrefaction.

Of the vertues of hearbes much hath beene written, yet fewe have shewed how the quintessence is drawne forth by calcination. Take of the mineralls such as are perfected by nature, and let them bee calcined in the alembick until the spirit ascendeth. So shall the chirurgeon have his medicaments ready against the season of sicknesse, and the quintessence preserved.